We moved to Chapel Hill from Atlanta in 2015 to leave the urban setting for a more natural environment. It also brought us closer to my mother, Dorothy Wright, who you may know from her playing cello at church. One of the biggest challenges we face as parents is teaching our children good values, and we found that the Community Church of Chapel Hill is an ideal place to reinforce what we have taught them and teach them even more.

Our church community has been strong while getting together virtually, but we miss the face to face interactions. We are excited to return to the building. When we do, there will be a new space to hold our community and provide meeting space where we can organize our actions together.

As treasurer and chair of the finance task force of the building project, I see how great an impact our capital donations have on the project. To help the church, we have increased our pledge an equivalent amount for another year, and we plan to fulfill that pledge before the building is completed so the church can save on interest.

There are many worthy causes and we support other charities, but we feel that supporting the building project has a lot of “bang for the buck.” The new space will help our children learn and connect in a more usable space and will give our church community a place to gather and help a wide variety of organizations. Our pledge will impact us briefly, however the building will stand for many decades and make an impact into the future.
